Making a world of difference
through Education

sim.org.au/teaching

“Without a doubt, life here is different. ...God has been helping me to grow in many ways, and each time I do something new, I am reminded again that He is always there to support me through it. ...I marvel at how God has been able to equip me and use me for His will, despite my shortcomings and despite what I thought I would ever be able to do.”

Jensine F., Teacher

Teach. Train. Impact.

Making a world of difference through education

Since 1893, SIM has been making disciples. Why? Because we are convinced no one should live and die without hearing God's good news. This compels us to go to hard to reach places to share the gospel with those who will not otherwise ever hear it.

You may wonder what teaching has to do with reaching the least reached. Well, everything.

Training the next generation

Ministry opportunities for teachers

The following pages reveal specific ways your teaching skills can be used to reach the least reached - by training up the next generation of godly men and women, coming alongside missionaries, and responding to needs in:

International Schools

Families going overseas to share the gospel need a whole support system as they go. Recognising and responding to this need, SIM founded or partnered with schools around the world to provide excellent, Christ-centred education for our missionary children. Over time, God opened doors for these schools to include children from the expatriate and local communities, including children whose parents are world leaders, business professionals, NGO workers, and embassy staff. It's an amazing community.

Non-traditional Opportunities

SIM provides many creative ways to support missionary families and reach the least reached. Non-traditional teaching roles allow for SIM personnel to respond to the needs of diverse and unique communities. Non-traditional teaching opportunities are located wherever there is a need, including South America, North Africa, Sub-Saharan Africa, the Middle East, and Asia.

Homeschool

and reaching beyond

across diverse communities...

- By homeschooling missionary children you allow their parents to serve in the ministry they are trained to do. Families who work in remote areas struggle with limited educational options for their children and recognise they cannot sustain long-term ministry without meeting their kids' needs. Being a homeschool teacher is an extremely valuable support role that helps keep missionary families on assignment. How this works is very flexible. It can be done in the family home or teaching several families' children in a one-room schoolhouse-type setting. Opportunities and locations vary from year to year, dependent on need.
- Teaching in a university setting provides the opportunity to reach college students and challenge their thinking as they enter adulthood. Whether it's teaching English as a Second Language (ESL), working as a professor in your area of expertise, or providing theological education, you can help reach those who have never heard the name of Jesus, or train those who have heard to share the good news more effectively.
- Teaching in a local school is a great way to engage a community with the gospel and learn a lot about the culture. It requires learning the local language, but can be a valuable support to educators around the world.

Next steps

Moving forward... getting connected...

The Bible tells us that one day we will see people from every nation, tribe, people, and language worshipping around God's throne (Revelation 5–7). We believe God has called us to make disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ in communities where He is least known; teachers are a key part of bringing that vision to reality. Will you consider teaching with SIM?

We want people who are:

Passionate about serving Jesus Christ by ministering to His people.

Resilient, able to live in hard places doing hard things.

A good fit with SIM's intentional multinational and interdenominational character.

For more information, or to begin talking with one of our experienced teammates, connect with us today at sim.org.au/talktous. We'd love to get to know you, hear your heart, talk through next steps, and clarify expectations. We can't wait to see how God will work through you!

Notes:

“I will always be grateful for godly dorm parents and teachers who instilled biblical principles in me and who gave me the opportunity to be a well-rounded girl.
...Because of their investment in me,
I wanted to return and teach kids, too!
...I can't think of a better way to invest my life!”
